N.E.C. Session Pledges 1,000,000 Subscribers In U.S. To Israel Bond Issue

In the most hopeful pronouncement since Israel became a nation in 1948, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion reported at Atlantic City that his country was "well on its way" to achieve self-sufficiency in food production and balanced exports and imports "within six to ten years." His address was delivered on a recorded film shown before 1,100 delegates at the final session of the second annual National Economic Conference for Israel, arranged by the Israel bond organization.

In response to the filmed address the delegates unanimously pledged to enroll 1,000,000 American Jews as subscribers to the $500,000,000 bond issue, which Mr. Ben-Gurion termed "an indispensable factor in our efforts to achieve economic stability." At earlier sessions, it had been announced that 400,000 persons had subscribed to $140,000,000 in the bonds since the drive began in May, 1951, and that this money was being used for upbuilding Israel's economy.

Mr. Ben-Gurion informed the delegates that since 1948 the cultivated farm areas of Israel had increased four and one-half times, observing that "we shall be able within a reasonable number of years to be practically self-sufficient in food requirements." He listed a sharp increase of new factories during the last four years and the discovery and exploiting of natural resources in the Negeb, says the New York Times.

Admitting Israel's difficulties in absorbing large masses of immigrants, he added:

"We have taken people from all ... of the globe, from ... countries with widely diverse backgrounds and are welding them through our schools or army and educational centers into one people with a common determination to succeed."

Abba S. Eban, Israel's Ambassador to the United States, said the purchase of Israel's bonds "is not an act not only of financial aid but of international conciliation; for it assures the indispensable basis of strength for the establishment of Israel's relations with its region and its continent."

Expressing the opinion that the Arabs and Israelis "will one day unite their strength to build on the shores of the Eastern Mediterranean a civilization worthy of their ancient and medieval past," he added: "We have intuitive feeling that some turning point in Arab-Israel relations might even now be near if tensions were not irresponsibly renewed by the annual routine of public denunciation in international councils.

"The Middle East lacks an adequate awareness of the social and economic responsibilities of government. Only in Israel do we see a Government elevated by free suffrage and responsive to the popular will. Democracy has no other pilot, no other school for miles around."

Mr. Eban then cited the close relationship of his country with the American people, "crowned by the reaffirmation at Chicago by both major political parties of their special sympathy for Israel."

Benjamin Abrams of New York, president of Emerson Radio and Television and general chairman of the Israel bond committee in Greater New York, outlined the

Pathologist Was Finder Of Blood Disease

Dr. Max Lederer, director of laboratories at Jewish Hospital in Brooklyn from 1918 until his retirement in 1943, died after a long illness in his home, 864 East Twenty-third Street, Brooklyn. His age was 67. Dr. Lederer, who received his medical degree in 1906 from Columbia University, was on the first interne staff of Jewish Hospital. From 1943 until his death, he served as consulting pathologist at Rockaway Beach, Jewish and Adelphi Hospitals.

He was an associate professor of pathology at the Long Island College of Medicine from 1930 until 1941. Twenty-five years ago, Dr. Lederer discovered a blood disease known today as Lederer's Anemia. In addition, he was one of those who urged that courts recognize blood tests as evidence in cases of doubtful paternity.

He was a member of the New York Academy of Medicine, the American Association of Immunologists, American Association of Pathologists and Bacteriologists, the New York Pathological Association and the American Medical Association. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Martha Lantz Lederer; a son, Theodore, and a daughter, Mrs. Leona Booth.

Intellectual Work, Commerce Attract Too Many In Israel

Figures on the occupational structure of Israel's population published in the Statistical Bulletin of the Central Bureau of ... other services, including the liberal professions, and in trade and finance was higher in Israel than in any other country in the world.

In Israel in 1951, 29.3 per cent of all gainfully employed persons were in public and other services compared with 26.6 per cent in Britain, (the next highest), 23 per cent in the United States, 9.6 per cent in Egypt and 20.4 per cent in Switzerland.

Trade and finance occupied 16.8 per cent of all Israel's gainfully employed, while the United States, with the next highest percentage in this category, showed 16.1 per cent, Britain 12.0 per cent, Egypt 7.5 per cent and Switzerland 15.0 per cent.

There were 505,000 gainfully employed persons in Israel's population of 1,346,000. By deducting from the population 70,000 persons still in immigrants' camps, the percentage of gainfully employed is 39.6. By January, 1953, the statisticians calculated the number of gainfully employed had risen to 530,000.

In most countries so high a proportion of persons engaged in services and in trade and finance would indicate a highly developed economy. In Israel, however, the high proportion is a reflection of occupational maldistribution that Jewish organizations have for decades been struggling to rectify by fostering vocational training leading to employment in agriculture, industry and crafts in Israel, says the New York Times.

Since Israel's economy is not highly developed, the proportions indicated can be maintained only by a steady flow of economic assistance from outside. Without that flow, the standard of living would drop to a bare subsistence level, or perhaps below it, and many of the persons engaged in services and in trade would find they could no longer make a living.

A somewhat similar effect is at present being produced by the Government's deflationary economic policy. Money has become so scarce that many persons engaged in non-essential services and luxury trade have found no customers. But Israel is still far from the stripped down type of economy and occupational structure that she can afford. Mobilization drive and conscription still exert an overwhelming attraction, at least so far as the older generation is concerned.

Israeli duties have raised a ... imports are ... manufacturers, factories are engaged in ... chemicals, textiles, ... confectionery, shoe polishes, gas cookstoves, soft ... electrical appliances are among the ... manufactures on ... Many ... figure. On the other hand, the ... Aviv newspapers can choose their staffs from an apparently unlimited number of applicants who are prepared to work for a pittance rather than abandon their journalistic activity. One daily, which publishes only four pages, has a full-time editorial staff of forty-five persons, not counting other correspondents and contributors.

An examination of trends in the occupational structure ... the less, several ... encouraging signs that the efforts to restructure employment among the Jews in Israel are meeting with some success. The percentages in trade and finance dropped 2.5 per cent from 19.4 in 1947 to 16.8 in 1951, while the percentages in the liberal professions dropped 3.0 per cent from 23.7 in 1947 to 7.7 in 1951. The percentage in public services apparently also — from 7.3 in 1947 to 29.3 in 1951 to ...

Ask U.N. To Take Up Palestine Dispute

Israel and six Arab states separately called on the United Nations to take up once again the Palestine dispute. The bid from the Arab states, which was submitted first, simply asked the General Assembly, which meets next month, to examine the work of the Palestine Conciliation Commission. This is the agency set up three years ago in an effort to reconcile the differences of the Middle-East neighbors.

On the heels of the request from the six Arab nations, Israel offered her counter-proposal for inclusion on the Assembly's provisional agenda if and when the world organization should agree to take up the Arab states' complaint. Both communications were couched in general terms.

The request from the Arab nations, however, was accompanied by a long memorandum that blamed Israel for the continuing unrest in the Middle East. It emphasized that it was useless and dangerous to hope for a settlement by negotiations outside the United Nations, says the New York Times.

Outlining the Arab states' side of the long-standing dispute, the memorandum complained that Israel had created the Palestine conflict through Zionist intrusion and expansion and was now threatening "to unleash new Zionist expansion."

The memorandum acknowledged that the question of relief to Palestine refugees already was on the Assembly agenda. It maintained, however, that the United Nations would be shirking its job if it did not take up the other political issues connected with the Palestine question. The request to the Assembly was signed by Syria, Lebanon, Yemen, Iraq, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

A plan for international ... [illegible] ... part of Israel and Jordan, the plan was never carried out. The Conciliation Commission was created in 1948 to help settle disputes between Israel and her Arab neighbors. In Paris last year Arab members fought vainly to have the Assembly draft a program that would underscore the readmission of Arab refugees to Israel. Presumably, they will make new efforts at the coming session to emphasize repatriation of Arab refugees.

Israel's request asked for the inclusion of an item accusing the Arab states of having violated their obligations under the United Nations Charter and also of having committed breaches of the armistice agreements that they signed with Israel in 1948. Israel's side was presented in a statement by Abba S. Eban, permanent delegate, who accused the Arab states of having raised the Palestine question to "renew tensions in the area at a time when there was some slight promise of their alleviation."

Mr. Eban held also that the Arab states sought to divert attention from their own refusal to come to terms with Israel, or even to consent to make contact with Israeli officials. The Israeli delegate also contended that since the Arab nations had introduced the Palestine issue, Israel was prepared to bring up such issues as Arab state threats against Israel and Egypt's continued interference with Israeli-bound vessels using the Suez Canal in violation of the Security Council's orders in August, 1951, to desist from such interference, says the New York Times.

German Restitution Exports Will Lay Basis For Expansion

The Israeli Cabinet meeting in Jerusalem resolved to devote $715,000,000 of the reparations from Germany to the development of agriculture, industry, communications and power. A committee of Ministers is to be formed to deal with all problems arising from the reparations agreement, and a Government-controlled company will implement the pact.

At a press conference Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett disclosed that there had been an exchange of notes with Moscow about Israel's claim for $500,000,000 in reparations from East Germany. The Soviet reply to Israel's first claim was unsatisfactory, and the Foreign Ministry has answered, but Mr. Sharett declined to disclose details of the exchange, says the New York Times.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, chairman of the Jewish Agency Executive, who played a key role in negotiations, told correspondents that Dr. Konrad Adenauer, Chancellor of West Germany, had been urged by Secretary of State Dean Acheson and British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden to reach a settlement on Israel's claims when the trio met to sign the contractual agreement in Bonn.

The West German reparations exports to Israel under the 3,450,000,000-Deutsch mark ($822,000,000) agreement signed in Luxembourg will lay the basis for large-scale Israeli economic expansion but will provide scant consolation to luxury-starved consumers.

This became evident when the text of the treaty, containing the hitherto confidential schedule of deliveries, became available. Although the German delegation at various times during the negotiations was prompted by trade groups at home to suggest consumer items—even wines at one point—the final list heavily emphasized productive goods.

The agreement contains detailed schedule for the first year that is intended to set the pattern for the ensuing years. Totalling 200,000,000 Deutsche marks, it includes the following groups:

1. Metals including pig iron, rolling mill products, foundry products, drawn and cold rolled iron and steel products and semifinished nonferrous metal products—26,500,000 marks.

2. Steel manufactures including machines, tractors, construction machinery, locomotives, vehicles, part payments on one 10,000-ton and one 8,000-ton cargo ship, electrical and electronic equipment—45,000,000 marks.

3. Chemical and allied products including rubber and asbestos goods, chemicals, solvents, dyes, and plastics, synthetic and cotton textiles, prefabricated houses, packing for citrus fruits, leather, building materials, ceramic and glass products and mineral oil—35,000,000 marks.

4. Agricultural products including breeding cattle and seeds—3,500,000 marks.

Cream butter and sugar; add beaten egg and vanilla to creamed mixture; sift together baking powder, flour and salt, and add to mixture. Separate one-quarter cup of dough and mix with one-quarter cup of flour, and one-half teaspoon sugar to form crumbly dough. Grease eight-inch cake pan, and press remaining dough along bottom and sides. Spread peeled and cut apples on dough, sprinkle lightly with sugar, and spread crumbly dough on top of apples. Was Research Expert In Diseases

Dr. Emanuel Barnett Schoenbach, Professor of Medicine at the University of the State of New York's College of Medicine and director of medical services at Maimonides Hospital, both in Brooklyn, died of a heart attack at his home, 1807 Avenue K, Brooklyn. He was 40 years old.

Dr. Schoenbach, a research expert in bacteriology, immunology and infectious diseases, has published nearly 100 scientific papers in his specialities. He took part two years ago in studies at the Johns Hopkins Medical School that were reported to have resulted in a way to arrest cancer.

The physician was graduated from Harvard College in 1933 and received his medical degree, cum laude, from the Harvard Medical School four years later. After working as a research fellow at Harvard, he became a resident physician at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York. He returned to Harvard as an instructor in 1941 and 1942.

In the second World War he reached the rank of lieutenant colonel, serving on the War Department's Board for the Investigation of Influenza and the Control of Other Epidemic Diseases. Dr. Schoenbach was also field director of a commission investigating meningitis.

Later he became Assistant Professor of Preventive Medicine at Johns Hopkins University and also served as a medical consultant to the Veterans Administration. He returned to New York, his birthplace, to assume the university and hospital posts last autumn.

Dr. Schoenbach was editor-in-chief of The Quarterly Review of Medicine of the Washington Institute of Medicine, and a member of many organizations. Surviving are his widow, the former Frances Rubens; a daughter, Wendy; two sons, Victor and Andrew; his mother, Mrs. Anna Hackmayer Schoenbach; a sister, Mrs. Bertha Blume; and a brother, Sol. Schoenbach, first bassoonist with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Says Third Party Is Not Against Jews

An insinuation that there might be anti-Semitism in the Constitution party, a newly formed third party, was refuted by its national chairman, Haliburton Fales, a New York broker. Mrs. Suzanne Silvercruys Stevenson, a founder of the party, charged that an "unauthorized meeting" of the party's national committee in Philadelphia had re-written the party principles, including a statement which, she said, "sounded like anti-Semitism."

Mrs. Stevenson announced that she and Percy L. Greaves jr., of Chevy Chase, Md., were therefore resigning as temporary co-chairmen of the party. Mr. Fales first asserted that their resignation was superfluous, because they already had been deposed by the Philadelphia meeting, and that he had been elected to succeed them. He said the meeting was properly authorized and that all but three of the national committeemen were present in person or by proxy.

The passage to which Mrs. Stevenson objected is: "We must preserve our Christian heritage which has been the strength of this Union." Mr. Fales said the passage referred to a heritage of "good will" and was not meant as an affront to any religious group.

Mrs. Stevenson, a sculptress, is the sister of the Belgian Ambassador and until last month was national chairman of the Minute Women of the United States of America. At Philadelphia the party launched a campaign to persuade members of the electoral college to disregard party instructions and vote for Gen. of the Army Douglas MacArthur for President and Sen. Harry F. Byrd, D., Va., for Vice-President.

The award of £2,000,000 (Israeli) contract to the Construction Aggregates Corporation of Chicago for the second phase of the drainage project in the Huleh swamps, on the Israeli-Syrian border, was announced in Jerusalem by the Jewish National Fund, which holds the concession for reclamation work. The first phase, widening and deepening the Jordan River bed, was carried out by an Israeli contracting concern, but it was found that Israeli contractors lacked the technical equipment, such as floating dredges, to continue the job.

Mr. Cape was presented with the prize in the University Chapel, by the University president, Harold W. Dodds. Wood Legacy Prize for highest standing in the junior year; was a member of the varsity debate panel; the International Association; the Chemistry Club; was president of the Prospect Club; and took part in freshmen and junior varsity one-hundred-and-fifty-pound crew.

The percentage of persons in agriculture in 1951 was 13.9, only a little higher than that of Belgium with 12.3 per cent, one of the world's most densely industrialized nations; and it was somewhat lower than that of the United States with 17.6 per cent.

Industry and crafts and quarries accounted for 23.6 per cent of Israel's gainfully employed, compared with 25.4 per cent in the United States, 43.5 per cent in Belgium, 8" per cent in Egypt and 36.7 per cent in Switzerland.

The trend in Israeli agriculture and industry was indecisive. In 1947, 12.6 per cent was gainfully employed in agriculture and in 1951 13.9 per cent; in industry and crafts and quarrying there were 26.5 per cent in 1947 and 23.6 per cent in 1951.

Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld, national director of Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations, and Isaac Imber, head of the New York office of Ramca Israel Corporation, an Israeli building concern, signed the contract providing for extensive alterations on the former Swiss Consulate building in Jerusalem which was recently purchased by Hillel as a student center for the Hebrew University. The alterations are designed to fit the building for its new purpose by the time the academic year opens in November.

Sin And World Atonement

"Our Father, our King, we have sinned before Thee". (Ritual)

For thousands of years man has been discussing the question of sin. Theological history records some of the bitterest debates dealing with the subject. Philosophers of past ages were perplexed by this phenomenon and psychologists of our own day are still grappling with the problem of sin, its origin, and the means of obtaining forgiveness.

What is sin? Originally sin was not a term involving ethical standards, the relations between man and man. Sin was and is a theological term involving the relationship between man and God. Initially sin meant the violation of the will of God. And where the Diety had not ethical attributes there need not have been a question of right and wrong. Thus, for example, in the early pages of the Book of Genesis the traditional story tells of Adam and Eve having sinned. What was their sin? They certainly did not harm anyone. They ate of the tree of knowledge, breaking the prohibition ordered by the Diety, and hence they were guilty of disobeying the will of God and therein they sinned.

At a later time in the history of Judaism when the ritual came to play an important and dramatic role in worship, sin meant a violation of ritual codes. Failure to offer the instituted sacrifices, failure to observe the details of ritual constituted sin.

For God was comprehended as the God of ritualism. This conception of God as the creator of ritual and the thought that ceremonies are of divine origin are still held by some who consider a person religious just because he observes the minutiae of ritual. Of course, in this light we can appreciate the Haftorah reading for Yom Kippur wherein the prophet Isaiah cries out: "Is such the fast that I have chosen? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen? To loose the fetters of wickedness, to undo the bonds of the yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

Ritual itself serves a purpose, but, says the prophet, not ritual is important but the ethical life, a life of justice, compassion and love. Thus the prophets of Israel revolutionized the conception of sin when they advanced the God concept. God wants man to be holy in conduct since God himself is the God of holiness and justice. Thus sin became a term applied not to ritual but to infraction of the moral law which the prophets proclaimed constituted the will of God.

The Biblical literature reveals the various strata of thought, indicating the evolutionary growth of theological thinking in Israel. As Israel grew in ethical stature it in turn redefined the God idea. Now, while we recognize that today these are ethical codes in existence and the violation of these is termed sinful, they do not give us the complete answer to the question of defining the term sin. Surely, the ethical code regulates: "Thou shalt not kill." Yet, behold how in war the state orders the soldier to do this very thing to the enemy.

Sin in our own day may still be defined as an offense against the will of God, the God within us. If in terms of modern science we conceive of life as a process of growth, sin is anything that spells faithlessness to one's highest nature. Of old the sages of Israel have spoken of a battle within man between the evil and good inclinations. Out of this war within one's soul man grows in character when the Yetzer Ha-Tov triumphs and the evil impulses are subdued and conquered. Sin may be defined as the sum of any man's failure to live the highest and noblest life that is possible in his relationship with himself, his fellow man and God.

Who in the light of this definition can claim on Yom Kippur that he is without sin? "Cholonu"! We have all sinned. Who has not "missed" reaching the highest goals in life? While most of us are not guilty of sins of commission we are guilty of sins of omission. We have failed to grasp the opportunities for doing kindness; blessed with talent, we refused to utilize it for the benefit of society. It is not good enough to avoid bad but one must actively engage in doing good. It is the man who does not acknowledge a shred of inadequacy who is indeed incapable of moral growth. On Yom Kippur day the growing soul is certainly disturbed by "divine discontent."

The young men and women of our community who are possessed of means and culture sin when they do not lead and serve their people. The rich who are ungenerous are sinners. Not what we give to charity counts most but what we could give and fail to give. The failure to heed the generous impulse of the soul is sin. Alas, the stewardship of wealth carries with it a grave moral responsibility! Because many well-to-do fail to measure up in their giving, many a good communal undertaking is impeded, and though realization of it be delayed, the community manages to move on nevertheless. The sad feature is that the niggardly rich prevents himself from realizing the beauty in his own nature. How pathetic is such a sin.

Yom Kippur summons us to seek "at-one-ment" with our higher self, with our fellow man and with God. Yom Kippur asks for a clear heart and renewed spirit in order that we may attain forgiveness. The first step in the process of atonement is the consciousness of sin. But the mere knowledge of our sin must be followed by reparation. Make good the evil we have wrought and last, but not least, here must be born within us a sense of shame. The brute has no sense of shame. Man is the only creature that can blush and this is a sign that a human being is conscious of error.

The peace of the world is now being threatened because of the lack of consciousness of sin on the part of all nations, victor and vanquished alike. Let not victor nations claim self-righteousness. World atonement is now essential if we are to redeem society. Our determination to build a social order on moral foundations must be resolute.

We Jews who have been so much sinned against by a cruel world, hope as we stand in our houses of prayer before our celestial judge, and somehow believe, that side by side with us as we offer our accounting to the Almighty, there are standing nations of the earth striving for at-one-ment and praying that God forgive: "Our Father, our King, we have sinned before Thee."

GERMAN RESTITUTION

5. Services such as transport and insurance—16,000,000 marks.

6. Payment from German sterling balances for oil to be bought by Israel from Britain—75,000,000 marks.

In an exchange of letters attached to the treaty Israel agrees to give "special consideration" to buying in West Berlin. The German delegation's letter says, "There is no need to emphasize the reasons for this request."

The Arab League Council at its meeting in Cairo resolved to dispatch a delegation to Germany in an effort to prevent ratification of the treaty under which the West German Republic is to pay Israel compensation for Nazi persecution of the Jews. The mission of the delegation will be to convince Germans in and out of the Government that they should throw out the treaty if they want to maintain the traditional friendship between the German and Arab peoples, says the New York Times.

N.E.C. SESSION

major objectives of the bond drive. Among other speakers was James G. McDonald, former United States Ambassador to Israel. Julian B. Venesky, chairman of the executive committee of Israel bonds, presided.

Israel's current program of self-denial will hold little meaning unless investment dollars are made available immediately to increase its industrial and agricultural production, Dr. Joseph Burg, Israel's Minister of Health, asserted. At the same time, Henry Morgenthau Jr., chairman of the board of governors of the State of Israel bond drive in the U.S. told 1,100 delegates attending the second annual National Economic Conference for Israel that greater opportunities for private enterprise in the infant state could be created with the aid of Israel bonds.

Stressing that private capital in Israel "is no different from private capital in any other part of the world," Mr. Morgenthau held that the sale of Israel bonds was a vital factor to develop electric power, harbors, transportation, railroads and irrigation to expand Israel's productive capacity."

Mr. Morgenthau decried the tendency of private capital to be "timid and reluctant" in establishing new horizons of industrial growth. He maintained that the entire stucture of Israel's expanded economy "depends in large measure on Government capital," adding that "Government capital for Israel means Israel bonds."

In imparting a comprehensive picture of his nation's program to achieve economic stability, Dr. Burg reported that the tax burden of the Israel citizen was 10 per cent greater than that of the average Briton and two and one-half times greater than that of the average American, according to the New York Times. "All of our sacrifices, however," he said, "cannot give us the investment dollars we need to build up our economy and, therefore, the Israel bond issue represents the crucial factor in determining our economic future."

Dr. Burg pledged "that every investment dollar will be put to work to strengthen the economic foundations of our country, to narrow the gap between our exports and imports and to save and earn the foreign currency to repay with interest every penny that we borrow."

Describing the Negev Desert as the focal point "of our greatest opportunities for economic success," Dr. Burg said that the resources that have been discovered in that area "can be transformed into the substance of success only if we have the investment capital to exploit them."

Robert R. Nathan, prominent economist, asserted that "a new level of Israel bond sales will put Israel over the top in achieving self-support and in laying the solid foundation for one of the most prosperous communities among all free nations."

Rabbi Irving Miller, president of the Zionist Organization of America, sharply criticized "those who are forever pointing to the 'risks' of financial investment in Israel. In creating the state of Israel, the Jewish people throughout the world automatically took upon themselves the obligation of ensuring the state's survival and promoting its growth," he said.

Harold J. Goldenberg, of Israel, director of the Israel Investment Center, told the conference that the success of private industry in Israel could be attained if the roads and other basic facilities to assure modern industrial development. Israel, Mr. Goldenberg, added, wants "the kind of industry, the kind of investment that will make it easier for us to keep all of our people employed—the kind of investment that will go not merely to the major cities, such as Tel Aviv and Haifa, but will reach into new industrial areas such as Beersheba."

At a special session, Zionist Labor delegates opened officially a special campaign for the sale of Israel bonds in honor of Eliezer Kaplan, Israel's first Minister of Finance, who died two months ago.
